The Guaranty Law in Kansas has done more to put the depositories in this state on a level with that of the West than is true of any other state law. It is true that under this law banks do not operate under a limited charter, but it is true that in the absence of it the depositories in Kansas would be in a worse position than under the law of the state. The Guaranty Law has done more to put the depositories in Kansas on a level with those in other states than is true of any other state law.

The banks in Kansas have been able to secure excellent capital, and this has been due in a large degree to the fact that the laws of the state have been adequate to the needs of the time.

The Guaranty Law has been a great success in the state, and it is believed that it will continue for a long time to come.

Dear Superintendent:

I am writing to express my concerns regarding the Kansas Banking Department's recent decision to change its procedures for the appointment of bank examiners. These changes have serious implications for the supervision and regulation of the banking industry in Kansas, and I urge your immediate attention to this matter.

The current system for the appointment of bank examiners is designed to ensure a thorough and impartial review of candidates. However, the recent changes seem to be motivated more by political considerations than by a commitment to the integrity and effectiveness of the banking sector.

Specifically, the new policy appears to favor candidates who are affiliated with certain financial institutions or individuals who have ties to influential political figures. This type of selection process could lead to a conflict of interest and undermine the credibility of the Banking Department's decisions.

I believe it is crucial that the Banking Department maintain its reputation for impartiality and professionalism. Please consider the implications of these changes carefully and take steps to ensure that the appointment process remains fair and transparent.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

Kansa Bank Commissioner
Respectfully submitted,

Joseph J. Dorrity, Bank Commissioner.
